

CHAPTER V CONCLUSION

The Ukraine crisis is such a harrowing event and it took a huge number of victims whereas the tension between Russia, the west, and Ukraine remain to exist. The author has examined each chapter thoroughly and carefully pick the most valid data from the internet, books, articles, journals. In the second chapter, the author has explained how the international politics work in which the dynamics of it is quite fluctuating, why war and conflict is extremely inevitable, and how many times NATO have involved in a conflict whether involved militarily or not. In the third chapter, the author emphasized on the Ukraine crisis diametrically and explains how is the conflict, when it all started, what is the caused, and how many parties are involving.

In the fourth chapter, the author have provided the strategy of NATO in solving Ukraine crisis and it is pretty clear that after all of the evidence which can be seen, it is pretty obvious that even though NATO is having a positive response towards Ukraine intentions in joining NATO and NATO gives special treatment by creating the Comprehensive Assistance Packag for Ukraine and generally creating the Membership Action Plan, nevertheless, based on the perspective of the author, NATO will not involved militarily towards the crisis.

NATO cannot give a special attention to Ukraine because they have many other important tasks to do in which costs a lot of money. Nonetheless, NATO and its member states have provided a lot for Ukraine. Henceforth, seeing the number of casualties NATO involvment is really necessary, and if Ukraine officially accepted as a member, they somehow have to be self-sufficient, because military engagement to fight against Russia is impossible for some reasons. NATO would not afford to victimize themselves, see NATO consists of several European countries such France, and Germany, and many of those European countries somehow have a complex economic entanglement and neediness towards Russia even though they put such heavy sanctions towards Russia.

If some exceptions are made even though it may be sounded superficial, impossible, and against all international relations odd, however if the different perspectives between Russia and the west could comprehend properly, it can be a good start for both of them for an example will be EU along with Russia and the EU could manage to cooperate in working to ensure the world stability, enhance the capability in order to encounter the global terrorism, supporting the conventional weaponry usage limitation in the Middle East and also Eurasian region.⁸²

NATO and Russia could go hand in hand with strengthening the global security by forming some kind of bilateral relationship by eradicating the term "old enemy" NATO could probably call Russia as a "strategic partner" to minimize or even resolve the Ukraine crisis. If later on Russia-NATO relation is established, firstly something that likely to happen is the Russia-west tension will be reduced. Nevertheless, if this utopian prediction happens, NATO should watch their back just in case Russia turns against them, and the last things is to welcoming Russia to be more integrated to the international system rather than keep gerrymandering the position internationally.⁸³
