A. Historical Background PT Unilever

In 1885, William and James Lever were brothers from England who started managing a company called Lever Brother. The first product they produce is Sunlight brand laundry soap. The founder of this company has a goal in creating its first product, which is to campaign for handwashing in order to make a healthier life. Marketing carried out by these two brothers is attractive packaging and good advertising. In this way, it will increase product sales from the company. After succeeding with Sunlight branded laundry soap, Lever Brother began producing Lux and Lifebouy soap.

Successfully marketing the products they produce, PT Unilever or known as Lever Brother at the beginning of its establishment began to join companies from the Netherlands. The founder of the Dutch company was Anton Jurgens and also Van Der Berg. The merger of the two companies produced a company called Margarine Unilever Brothers, the first product they produced was margarine. The company expanded its business in the European continent with the aim of expanding product marketing from their companies. This goal can be achieved easily because the two joint companies have similarities, namely:

1. Products produced in large quantities
2. Distributing products by expanding the sales area

In the end this joint company used the name Unilever as the name of their company which until now is still known as PT Unilever. The headquarters of this multinational company are in London and Rotterdam. However, PT Unilever has many subsidiaries in several countries as well as in Indonesia. There are 190 countries in the world that join multinational companies with more than 400 brands which every day 2.5 billion people use these products (Unilever, 2018).

   Every company that stands in general has an organizational structure in it. Organizational structure is compiled at the beginning in starting activities carried out in a company. This is done to regulate the easier implementation of functions, organization, placement and supervision. To achieve this, the existence of an organizational structure is important. Organizational structure is a formal framework in which there are already divisions regarding work tasks that have been divided, grouped and coordinated (Robbins S. P., 2007). Thus it will facilitate the running of activities carried out in a company.
