

ABSTRACT

This research aims to analyze the extent of the influence of Government Expenditure on Health, Public Facilities and Government Expenditure on Education toward Development Index in Bengkulu Province. The object of the research are the data of 9 districts and a city from 2013 to 2017, obtained from various institutions such as the BPS and the resources associated to this research. The analytical tool used is by using panel data. Based on the analysis, the results obtained are variable Government Expenditure in the Health Sector had a significant positive effect on the Human Development Index in Bengkulu Province. Variable Government Expenditure on Education has significantly negative effect on the Human Development Index in Bengkulu Province. While the variable of Public Facilities has no affect on the Human Development Index in Bengkulu Province.

Keywords: Government Expenditure on Health, Public Facilities and Government Expenditure on Education, and Human Development Index (HDI).