Teacher Credibility as a Source of Communication in IPEKA Integrated Christian School (IICS) in Jakarta influences students' learning motivation into digital classroom. This research focuses on the study of the influence of teacher credibility as a source of communication on learning motivation into digital classroom among students of IPEKA Integrated Christian School (IICS) Jakarta.

The methodology in this research is quantitative explanatory research using a questionnaire distributed to 128 respondents. Analysis of the data used is the analysis of Simple Linear Regression. Testing instruments using Confirmatory Factor Analysis (CFA), and Cronbach's alpha formula, by conducting validity and reliability testing.

The results of this study indicate the standardized coefficients of 0.595 with 34.9% student motivation into digital classroom influenced by the credibility of the teacher as a source of communication. The credibility of the teacher as a source of communication that emerges is perceived by students as people who have character or character who are friendly, fair, firm, interesting, and proficient in the digital classroom learning process. The corresponding result leads to the theory of the possibility of elaboration on the peripheral path, that the communicant will not criticize a message and tend to use instructions, as the speaker has high credibility. All teachers have received special training conducted with the Google Instruction, so that it is easy for all teachers to establish credibility as a source of positive communication in the eyes of IPEKA Integrated Christian School (IICS) Jakarta SMPK students.
