

ABSTRACT

The trade war between the United States versus China began in early 2018 after the US imposed tariffs on washing machines and solar panels originating from China and since then, economic warfare has increased rapidly. Vietnam is the fastest economic growth country for the past eight years. This newly opened country is blessed by the China-US trade war because Chinese manufacturers are beginning to shift production to Asia which is cheaper, such as Vietnam and Bangladesh. In response to this event, this thesis aims to describe and analyze the response and strategy of the Vietnamese government towards war trade between US and China.

This paper use Trade War concept, and International Trade. This study found that the strategy of Vietnam's national interests in taking the advantage of US-China trade war, by boosting export product and accepting foreign direct investment (FDI) widely. FDI inflows in particular have been very strong and have provided a good balance for the Vietnam economic.
