Abstract

The thesis aims at analyzing the state of youth culture movement in Central Asia and focusing on the Uzbekistan. It examines how youth of central Asia is, on one hand, Its being challenged and the contested by the state ideology and, on the other hand, by Islamic religious movement, that crating the situation that adds up to the conflict potential and youth exclusion in the region. The authorities are not only fighting religious movements that appeal to young people, but they are also pouncing attacks on various aspects of youth culture which is the same time being excessively politicized by the government. Thus the alternative and vanguard youth are being marginalized, demonized and excluded in the society
