Abstract

The establishment of cooperation between one country and others nowadays have become a common phenomenon. Basically, developing country will try to co-operating with developed country in order to boost their economic conditions. However, in this study the cooperation is established by two developing countries, they are Indonesia and Hungary. Although there are a variety of economic problems which faced by both country, especially the European crisis that makes the two countries' economics deficit, but Indonesia still maintains even more want to strengthen the relationship between the two countries. Based on this statement, raises the question of research related to this phenomenon. To answer all questions, the author use the theories and review of the literature to assess these. Because of this research, the authors finally get the results of the question such as Indonesia wants to strengthen the relationship between the two countries because Indonesia sees the ability of Hungary as a country that survive from a crisis and because of Hungary's superiority as a country with potential markets in Central and Eastern Europe.
